MY STORY

My career ambitions to join the Metropolitan Police were dashed right from the onset when I failed the initial application due to my poor eyesight; how things have now changed.

At the time a sure way of earning some reasonable money was to dip into the world of sales which I did, rather enjoyed and was quite good at. During this time if I was not at work you would find me on the hockey field or at the hockey club bar, which is where I met both my husband and the opportunity to enter the field of finance and payroll.

A fellow hockey player and I set up a UK subsidiary of an American biotechnology company, which we grew and I learnt many skills taking the turnover from zero to £2 million in eight years before I left to have my twin boys.

While I enjoyed the mummy role it was not long before I was helping another friend with accounts and payroll for a small contract catering company.

A conversation in the playground led to me covering maternity leave in the Finance Department at SSE; 11 years later I was made redundant but not before becoming Payroll Manager. They say no-one ever starts out wanting to work in payroll!!!

So, in what I thought would be a leisurely stroll in to retirement I took up the game of golf, which has truly got me hooked. My husband and I are never far from the course either at home or abroad; the boys were off to university so now for our time.

Little did I know that my sister-in-law, Carolyn, had other plans, so here I am as the Financial Controller of Bloomsbury Wealth.
